

1. The first part of the document is a letter from the President of the United States to the Congress, dated January 1, 1861. It is a very important document, as it sets out the President's policy for the new year. The President states that he is pleased to see the Congress assembled, and that he is confident that the country is in a good position to meet the challenges of the future. He also mentions the recent election of Abraham Lincoln as President, and expresses his confidence in the new administration. The letter is a classic example of presidential rhetoric, and is well worth reading for anyone interested in the history of the United States.

2. The second part of the document is a report from the Secretary of the Treasury, dated January 1, 1861. It is a very important document, as it provides a detailed account of the financial state of the country. The Secretary states that the country is in a good financial position, and that the government is able to meet its obligations. He also mentions the recent election of Abraham Lincoln as President, and expresses his confidence in the new administration. The report is a classic example of financial reporting, and is well worth reading for anyone interested in the history of the United States.